CHARLES WILSON

Charles Wilson earned his Mus.Bac. and Mus.Doc. at the University of Toronto in 1952 and 1954. His compositional career developed under the guidance of Godfrey Ridout and later during two sessions at Tanglewood, Massachusetts under Lukas Foss, Carlos Chavez and Aaron Copland.

His musical career spans thirty years as a teacher in all levels of education from public school to university, and as a choral conductor, notably with the Bach-Elgar Choir of Hamilton, and as chorusmaster with the Canadian Opera Company.

Well known as an opera composer (Heloise and Abelard, Psycho Red, Kamouraska), Wilson's output includes many chamber and orchestral works as well as choral and solo vocal pieces, reflecting a long and fruitful interest in the human voice.

At present, he is professor of music in theory and composition at the University of Guelph and has, in recent years, expanded his musical awareness and interest to the field of electronic technology. The present composition Two Voices may be considered the first fruits of that interest in electronics coupled with the abiding love of the human voice.

TWO VOICES

The five poems chosen from the poetry of Gwendolyn MacEwen reflect in many ways the vast and traumatic changes in human conciousness and our perception of the universe in which we have our being in this 20th Century - changes which range from the nature of the physical universe expressed in sub-atomic particle theory and relativity theories to the nature of the human mind inaugurated by the investigations of Freud and Jung.

The first poem, "Universe: and", speaks of our traditional beliefs and convictions - our "mythology" - and its inability to come to terms with the new sensibility - "the machines of our myth grind down...rusting the wheels of human sense."

Its companion poem - "Universe and: the Electric Garden", conjures images of the physical forces which hold our universe together, the gravitational forces, the electromagnetic force, and the strong and weak forced formulated in the theories and discoveries of the New Physics - "the dancing patterns of organic energy" implied by the famous equation of matter and energy.

The third poem, "The Metallic Anatomy", documents, in graphic terms, the schizophrenic split of the human conscious - our dualistic way of viewing reality as being "out there" and "in here", and the traumatic consequences of such dualisms created by the human mind.

The fourth poem, "Two Voices", speaks of "love" as the spiritual "force" that can heal the dualisms and distinctions we make between human nature and its environment. The voice of "love" sets forth the consequences of its denial by the human spirit, and the human voice responds in its acceptance of the binding principle of "love".

The final poem, "The Love-clock", summarizes the essential organic "oneness" of nature - the spiritual unification of inner and outer reality, of mind and body, of space and time. It is, in effect, the emergence of a new "mythology" - a way of viewing our two worlds "out there" and "in here" as one world, and it brings us full circle to the first poem - the disintegration of the old mythology.

Musically speaking, I have attempted to create my own tonal universe, my own mythology, as it were (which is obviously in accord with that of the poet), and to set it forth as clearly and concisely as possible, trusting that its musical language is a faithful embodiment of my own beliefs and convictions, my own reality.

- C.M. Wilson

TALIVALDIS KENINS

Composer, teacher, and pianist, Talivaldis Kenins was born in Liepāja, Latvia in 1919 and emigrated to Canada in 1951. Mr. Kenins began teaching at the University of Toronto in 1952 and was coordinator of the composition division from 1977 to 1979. Presently he is professor of counterpoint and composition. He served as president of the Canadian League of Composers in 1973 and 1974.

As a student, Kenins studied at the State Conservatory at Riga with Joseph Witohl and at the Paris Conservatory with Simone Plé-Caussade, Olivier Messiaen and Tony Aubin. Upon graduation from the Conservatory in 1950 he was awarded a number of prizes including the coveted First Prize in composition. He first reached international recognition that year when his Septet was presented by noted German conductor Hermann Scherchen at the Darmstadt Festival. Kenins' large output includes numerous chamber works and seven symphonies. Over the years, Talivaldis Kenins has become one of Canada's most frequently commissioned composers.

CONCERTO DA CAMERA NO. 2 (1983)

This piece is a sequel to the Concerto da Camera No. 1 which was written in 1980 and scored for piano and a chamber group. The Concerto da Camera No. 2 follows a certain line of my compositions which started with the 1949 Septet when I discovered that the "concertante" style suits well my means of musical expression. This baroque method of interweaving instrumental dialogues in imitative or antiphonal techniques, occasionally in a virtuosic context, is for me quite a convenient device (or form, if you wish) around which to order my melodic, rhythmic and contrapuntal material. The use of such patterns has changed over the years but their basic concept remains largely the same.

When making the initial sketches for this Concerto I introduced the percussion to encourage myself in writing a 'divertissement' in some kind of a French mood. However the work soon proved to be in the "concertante" tradition again, hence the title. The solo part stands out as a vehicle for virtuosity, but the two "obbligato" brass instruments (French horn and trumpet) have their share of technical display, as well as the percussion in some passages. The string passages (to be expanded on some occasion to a larger string group) provides the unifying factor and forms the main body. The four movements (Molto moderato; Vivace quasi presto; Lento espressivo; Vivo e agitato) follow a traditional slow-fastslow-fast succession of rather tightly structured elements, with some occasional "piquanterie". which hopefully will betray the lighthearted character of this musical entertainment. The work is dedicated to Robert Aitken, to whom I am indebted for a number of superb performances of my works.

RAYMOND LUEDEKE

Born 1944 in New York, Mr. Luedeke has lived at various times in Japan and Austria as well as in five different areas in the United States, and since 1981, in Canada. His musical background is similarly varied, including experience conducting and performing with symphony orchestras, opera companies, jazz bands, military bands, and contemporary music ensembles. He is presently associate principal clarinet with the Toronto Symphony.

As a composer, he has written for a wide variety of ensembles, including symphony orchestra, concert band, and chorus as well as for various chamber music combinations. His most recent compositional credits include the orchestral prize from the International Horn Society for Fancies and Interludes III, both first and second prizes in the 10th annual Percussive Arts Society Composition Contest, and the Roy Thomson Hall Inaugural Fanfare Competition.

MYSTERY MADRIGALS (1975)

Mystery Madrigals was composed during the summer of 1975 while I was studying an Northwestern University with Allen Stout. At the time, I was passionately interested in the five-voice madrigal of the 16th-century composer, Claudio Monteverdi. I was particularly impressed by the way in which he made expressive little motives flower into longer phrases and by the way in which he orchestrates five voices as a collection of duos, trios, quartets and solos.

The titles of the individual movements of Mystery Madrigals are meant to be evocative without being precise - a mystery.

I The Harp

A single pitch grows into a long phrase. Later the five voices are tied together in various pairs or trios. For instance, shortly after the opening the clarinet plays a loud, accented, percussive figure which is imitated by the pizzicato of the cello and then by a percussive figure in the drums. This trio is counterpointed by a soft, melodic duo, the flute and violin, which outline a D-major chord in the background.

II Moonmarks

A melody played in a narrow compass by flute and clarinet grows into a much wider range. This same procedure is repeated in various ways in the course of the movement.

III Light's Marination

A band (all the pitches within a particular interval) of sound is defined by various duos and trios. The prominent resultant tones produced between piccolo and Ep clarinet are a particular feature of this movement. That is, when the two instruments are playing together in the high range, a third pitch will be heard quite distinctly.

IV Theatre of the Gods
This movement takes the form of a theme and eleven variations, with the percussion acting independently.
The initial violin chords are an introduction.
The theme is then stated by the cello. In the first variation the violin states the theme (already greatly varied) counterpointed by the cello. In the second variation the clarinet and flute act as a duo against the violin and cello
duo. Similarly, in each variation that follows, the five instruments are grouped in various pairs and trios. Variation Eleven, a coda, is organized around an extended cello cadence.

ALEXANDER GOEHR

Alexander Goehr, born in Berlin in 1932, studied composition with Richard Hall at the Royal Manchester College and while there founded the New Music Manchester Group. It was at this time that his first compositions were performed and published. On leaving Manchester he was awarded a French Government Scholarship and went to study at the Paris Conservatoire with Olivier Messiaen, and privately with Yvonne Loriod.

Goehr has received commissions from a great variety of organisations and his music has been performed in most parts of the world. International commissions include his opera Arden Muss Sterben, (to a libretto by Erich Fried), by the Hamburg State Opera which performed it in 1967. It received its British premiere with the New Opera Group and the London Sinfonietta in April 1974.

In 1967 Goehr formed the Music Theatre Ensemble for the Brighton Festival. The Ensemble's repertoire include the three music theatre works which form Triptych, written for the Ensemble (of which tonight's work is the third. The others are Naboth's Vineyard and Shadowplay). The Music Theatre Ensemble has appeared at the Brighton, City of London, and Edinburgh Festivals and on television and radio.

Alexander Goehr was appointed Professor of Music at the University of Cambridge in 1976.

SONATA ABOUT JERUSALEM (1970)

Sonata about Jerusalem was written in 1970 and first performed in January 1971 in Tel Aviv and Jerusalem.

It is based on texts derived from the "Autobiography: of Obadyah the Roselyte and other Hebrew texts of the 12th century. Obadyah was originally a monk from Oppido in Italy. He became a Jewish convert and fled to the East where he travelled and observed the Jewish communities in Jerusalem, Syria and Persia. The fragments of his autobiography include a Latin text transliterated into Hebrew Letters.

"Sol convertetur in tenebris et luna in Sanguinem antequam veniat dies Domini magnus et horribilis".

("The sun shall turn into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and terrible day of the Lord come".)

-Joel 11.31

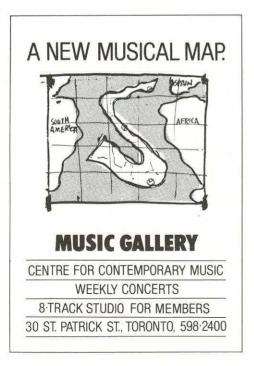

The setting of this text for female voices is used as a refrain.

The first section of the piece show the conditions of the Jews in Bagdad. By order of the governor, Abischogea, they are to wear badges on their heads and round their necks. The women are to wear one red shoe, one black. They are to wear bells to distinguish them from the women of Bagdad. They are beaten cruelly by their overseers.

A rumour comes to the land of a false "messiah" (Schlomo ben Dugai) who will rescue the people and bring them back to Jerusalem. The news is brought by a crazed girl. The Jews, described as the "wisest of all the Jews" - don green clothes - the colour of paradise. They climb to the roofs of their houses and await a miracle. As night falls they seem to see a vision of Jerusalem; in their ecstasy they seem to become a great bird: they fly.

But the morning light finds them still on their roofs. Shamefully they descend among the jeers of the people. A child mocks them: "Ha! They thought to fly to Jerusalem! But to fly, you must have wings."

The Sonata about Jerusalem is dedicated to Mrs. Reche Freier of Jerusalem. It was performed first in Hebrew. The present English version is by the composer.
